

Northline presentation design guide

Fifteen layout designs. An eight-slide executive review. Fictional company and data.

Start with the right structure

Choose a page structure that fits the message. The layout gallery provides visual references for common business communication tasks. Use it to plan order, hierarchy and emphasis in a new presentation.

State the main conclusion in the heading. Support it with relevant evidence. Keep detailed assumptions in a table or appendix.

One slide, one business point

Give each slide one main business point. Use numbers, labels and source notes to explain it without crowding the page.

Fictional examples

Company names, statements and figures in the Northline examples are fictional. Do not present preview values as client records or business results. Use approved, traceable sources for real work.

Applying the design guidance

Type and color

Use Arial as a design reference. Set titles near 32 points, body text around 18-22 points and footnotes near 10-12 points. Cover titles can be larger. Check contrast and use an approved brand palette.

Charts and tables

PDF examples show chart and table design. For any new deliverable, confirm values, labels, periods, units, source notes and rounding before sharing.

Images and diagrams

Use licensed images or client-owned photographs. Record each image's source and rights. The gallery uses labeled image slots. Keep diagram labels and connector paths clear and confirm the intended relationships in the final visual.

Final review

Check every slide at presentation size. Reconcile source data. Read every heading aloud. Remove unused sample text. Confirm dates, units and assumptions agree. Export a PDF and inspect it on desktop and phone.
